Poetry.

Nature. BY JOHN G. WHITTIER. The ocean locketh up to heaven, As 'twere a living thing ; The homage of its waves is given In ceaseless worshipping.

They kneel upon the sloping sand, As bends the human knee, A beautiful and tireless band, The priesthood of the sea

They pour the glittering treasures out, Which in the deep have birth, And chant their awful hymns about The watching hills of earth.

The green earth sends its incense up From every mountain shrine. From every flower and dewy cup That greeteth the sunshine.

The mists are lifted from the rills, Like the white wing of prayer ; They lean above the ancient hills, As doing homage there,

The forest tops are lowly cast, O'er breezy hill and glen, As if a prayerful spirit passed On nature as on men.

The clouds weep o'er the fallen world, E'en as a repentant love ; Ere, to the blessed breeze unfurled, They fade in light above.

The sky is as a temple's arch ; The blue and wavy air Is glorious with the spirit march Of messengers at prayer.

The gentle moon, the kindling sun, The many stars are given, As shrines to burn earth's incense on, The altar fires of heaven !

The Death of Josephine.

Darkness and clouds surrounded the pathway of Napoleon. In vain he struggled to retrieve his fortune. The last engagement at Leipsic decided his fortunes for the time, and consigned him to Elba.

Napoleon was an exile ; but in his retirement he did not forget the only being he ever really loved, his Josephine .---He immediately addressed a letter to her, breathing the same spirit toward her that he had always manifested, rather congratulating himself that his head and spirit were freer from the enormous weight of care, and intimating that hereafter his pen should be a substitute for the sword.

"The world," says he, " has as yet only seen me in profile. I shall now show myself in full. How many things have I to disclose ! how many are the men on whom a fa'se estimate has been placed ! I have heaped benefits upon millions of wretches ! What have they done in the end for me? They have all betraved me! Yes, all. I except from this number the good Eugene and yourself. forget you. Farewell, Josephine. NAPOLEON."

Upon reading these tidings so terrible, Josephine was overwhelmed with grief, and immediately answered his letter, breathing the same spirit of devotion to him, who was once her husband, that had always characterized her noble heart, and entreated him to say but the word, and she woold fly to him .---The remaining circumstances connected with her illness and death, we give in the language of Mr. Abbott.

A few days after this letter was written, the Emperor Alexander, with a number of illustrious guests, dined with Josephine at Malmaison. In the evening twilight, the party went out upon the berutiful lawn in front of the house for recreation. Josephine, whose health had become exceedingly precations through care and sorrow, being regardless of herself in devotion to her friends, took a violent cold. The next day she was worse. Without any definite form of disease, she day after day grew more faint and feeble, it was evident that her final change was near at hand. Eugene and Horiense, her most affectionate children, were with her by day and by night. They communicated to her the judgment of her physician, that death was near. She heard the tidings with perfect composure, and called for a elergyman to administer to her the last tites of religion.

Just after this solemnity, the Emperer Alexander entered the room. Eugene and Hortense, bathed in tears, were kneeling at their mothor's side. Josephine beckoned to the Emperor to approach her, and said to him and her children, "I have always desired the happiness of France. I did all in my power to contribute to it ; and I can say with truth, to all of you now present, at my last moment, that the first wife of Napoleon never caused a tear to flow."
