"Yes," said the Georgia editor, "I'm going to get a deal. Not that there's anything to fight about, but all the other papers are advertising that way."—Boston Post.

LONDON PURPLE.

We are having favorable reports from those who have used it as a worm poison. We are the agents now for the sale of this article.

CAWTHON & COLEMAN.

Epithelium of the Vegetable Compound ranks first as a curative agent in all complaints peculiar to women. Cures all urinary troubles of either sex.

The ocean seems to rage when the frightened passenger cries: "Perhaps you don't know that the ocean is a very dangerous place for a woman."—(Cawthon & Coleman.)

$100 per year can be easily made at home working for E. G. Ridenour, agent for the Street, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.—(Cawthon & Coleman.)

"Don't you think Jersey is just too lovely for any man?" she sweetly enquired. "I'm going to get a deal. Not that there's anything to fight about, but all the other papers are advertising that way."—Boston Post.

THE IMPENDING FATE.

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father, in His infinite providence, has called our dear departed brother and sister, Mrs. J. H. Hardie, to His heavenly home, and we, his brethren and sisters, are desirous to express our sympathy for his bereaved family, and to testify to his worth and the high esteem in which he was held by his friends, we have decided to publish a notice of his death, and to recognize the loss of a kind friend, a good Christian, a worthy brother and one who was of great service to his people.

Resolved, That we, the members of the Baptist Church of Selma, Ala., do hereby express our sympathy for the bereaved family, and to testify to his worth and the high esteem in which he was held by his friends, we have decided to publish a notice of his death, and to recognize the loss of a kind friend, a good Christian, a worthy brother and one who was of great service to his people.

ALABAMA MARRIAGE AID ASSOCIATION, SELMA, ALABAMA.

CLASS 10—OVR. MAR.

In presenting this plan, as a candidate for popular favor, we are giving our members the benefit of a system that surpasses anything yet offered the world. This plan contains new and attractive features which will add to its usefulness, perpetuity and security in all classes, can join both classes if desired, and need not be introduced. Any person desiring to become a member should first send for our plan, and receive it free of charge. Membership fees and assessments made therefor, except the salary of our officers, are paid for by the members of the organization of association, and no assessment shall be made for any member, until six months from date of his or her certificate, or which time an assessment will be made, will depend upon the number of members in the class. The amount of benefit in each class per month will be found under the table of benefits. Parts of months will not be counted.

No member shall have any claim whatever to the benefit of the Society, on a marriage that occurs in less than a month from the date of his or her certificate. Any member who marries in less than a month, but MUST pay assessments for 6 months from date of certificate. Classes A and B are both the same, except in matter in one month.

TESTIMONIALS.

SELMA, ALA., TALLADEGA CO., ALA., March, 1882. J.

Major Joseph Hardie: The 50-amp Improved Lummus-Taylor Gin, Feeder and Condenser, bought by me, has given me great satisfaction. The sample is good, it gives fine work, cleans the seed well, and runs smoothly. It is a new article, and I have never seen one of this kind before. You are to be congratulated on your success in manufacturing a machine of this kind. I have no objection to your publishing this testimonial, and to whom I refer any one wishing a gin.

Alabama Baptist. THE FAMILY CIRCLE. The Poet and the Children. (IN MEMORY OF MR. LONGFELLOW.) With a glory of winter sunshine Over his locks of gray, In his old homestead plain, He sat on his last birthday. With his books and his pleasant pictures, And his household and his kin, While a sound as of myriads singing From far and near stole in. It came from his own fair city, From the granite's household plain, From the Golden Gate of sunset, And the olden woods of Maine. And his heart grew warm within him, And his moistening eyes grew dim, For he knew that his country's children Were singing the songs of him. The keys of his life's glad morning, The psalms of his evening time, Whose echoes shall float forever In the winds of every clime. All their beautiful consolations, Their healthful birds of cheer, Came flocking back to his windows, And sang in the Poet's ear. Grateful, but solemn and tender, The music rose in his heart, And with a joy akin to sadness, And a greeting like farewell, With a sense of awe he listened To the voices sweet and young, The last of earth and the first of heaven, Seemingly in the songs they sang. And waiting a little longer, For the wonderful change to come, He heard the Summoning Angel Who calls God's children home. And to him, in a holler welcome, Was the music of the blessed Master: "O, such is the kingdom of heaven!" — J. G. Whittier, in My Wife's Answer.

The Two Labels. BY FLORENCE R. HALLLOWELL. Doctor Lawrence had a large practice, and was a man of so much intelligence and cultivation that Hugh Derwent considered himself very fortunate to secure the position of his assistant, particularly as the salary he received, though small, was sufficient to support him very comfortably and relieve the straitened income of his widowed mother. Hugh's principal duty was the dispensation of drugs, for Doctor Lawrence, like the majority of doctors in small country towns fifty years ago, compounded his own prescriptions, and kept a drugstore on a small scale. Hugh soon learned the names of the different medicines and chemicals, and became quite expert in the preparation of certain powders and tonics. He took a great interest in his work, was energetic, ambitious, quick to comprehend, and so obliging and sympathetic that patients coming to the store were often almost as ready to take the advice of the assistant as that of the doctor. But Hugh had one fault, which occasionally led him into trouble. He was inclined to be careless, and to allow his attention to be diverted from any work he had in hand. But fortunately his occasional mistakes had been those of omission rather than commission, and he had escaped with only a reprimand from the doctor, who was very much attached to him, and inclined to view his errors leniently. He little imagined that the doctor's attention would be attracted to his carelessness.

Four years passed quietly away, and Hugh was beginning to look forward to the day when he should become a doctor himself, when an event happened which plunged him into the darkest despair, and threatened to blight his whole life. For several days Doctor Lawrence had been complaining of headache and general debility, and Hugh had had more care and responsibility upon his shoulders than ever, doing double duty in both office and shop. But the doctor still continued to make his daily rounds, refusing the entire rest which he needed so sorely. Late one afternoon he called Hugh to his study and handed him two labels. "You will find two bottles on my prescription desk, Hugh," he said. "Put this big label on the small bottle, and the small label on the big bottle. Mr. Alden will call for the former and Mrs. Grey's servant for the latter. I intended to label them myself. And now don't let me be disturbed. I've been at Alden's four hours, and an about worn out. That boy of his won't last more than a day longer, poor fellow!" Hugh took the labels and went into the shop whistling. Peter Snow, the doctor's errand boy, sat by the stove mending a broken whip. "The doctor says that Harry Alden won't last much longer," said Hugh, as he went to the prescription counter. "I'm awfully sorry for his parents."

"We went out there last night," said Peter, "and they were all a-cryin'. He don't know nothin'. They'd got Doctor Pope there. That old Miss Snyder'd done it—always interferin'. She thinks the sun 'bout rises with Doctor Pope. Hugh, listen to Peter, he had no memory for the warning good Doctor Lawrence had more than once given him. "Remember what a responsible position you're in, Hugh," the physician had said. "Life and death lie in your hands. A single error in the composition of a dose of medicine might give you cause for the most bitter regret all the rest of your life. When you are busy with the drugs don't think of anything else. Don't run any risks." And Hugh intended always to be very careful. But putting on labels was such a trifling matter. He surely could do that and talk, too. So it happened that he made a mistake. He put the big label on the big bottle, and the small label on the small bottle. On the former was written "Ten drops every four hours," and on the latter, "A teaspoonful every hour until relieved."

"Where's Harry's medicine?" he asked. "Here it is, Mr. Alden," said Hugh, handing him the small bottle, and accompanying him out to where his mother stood by the side-walk. "I do hope you'll get better."

could not trust himself to speak on the subject of his son's illness. He climbed into the buggy with Hugh's assistance, and drove rapidly away. A little later Mrs. Grey's servant called, and Hugh gave her the big bottle. About midnight Hugh was roused by a groan from the doctor, who slept in an adjoining room. He sprang up and ran to him, greatly alarmed. The doctor was shivering as if with an ague fit, and could not speak. For nearly two hours Hugh worked over him, rubbing his limbs and forcing brandy down his throat. Then, just as he felt into an uneasy sleep, the doorbell of the shop rang furiously. Answering it, Hugh found that it was a messenger from Clover Farm who had called to get the doctor to return with him to see Harry, who was in a stupor from which it was impossible to arouse him. His parents were almost insane with grief. Hugh quickly explained the reason why Doctor Lawrence could not answer the summons. "You must go for Dr. Pope; there is nothing else to be done," he said in conclusion. "I suppose not," said the messenger, and springing into his saddle again, he put spurs to his horse and galloped off in the direction of Doctor Pope's residence. The next morning Doctor Lawrence awoke feeling much better. He dressed himself and lay down on the sofa in his study, and Hugh, much relieved, was whistling merrily over his work in the shop, when he was surprised to see Doctor Pope enter. Advancing with a stern look toward Hugh, the doctor drew from his pocket an empty vial. "Do you recognize this, young man?" he asked harshly. "Yes sir," answered Hugh, after a glance at it. "I gave it to Mr. Alden yesterday."

"It contained a powerful opiate," said the doctor, "and the prescription says 'a teaspoonful every hour until relieved.'"

"Impossible!" cried Hugh. "Ten drops every four hours is the customary dose, as I know well."

"Read the label for yourself," said Dr. Pope. Hugh did so, and in an instant flashed upon him what he had done. "I mistook the label," he faltered, as he staggered back. "And the bottle!"

"Is empty," said Dr. Pope, "and Harry Alden lies in a stupor from which only death can relieve him. Young man, your carelessness will cost you dear."

For a moment, Hugh stared wildly before him, as if striving to comprehend the terrible situation in which he stood, then with a low, bitter cry of despair, he rushed into his study, and fell on his knees by the sofa.

"It will kill my mother," he rushed into Dr. Lawrence's study, and fell on his knees by the sofa. "It did not take Dr. Lawrence long to understand what had happened, and, ordering his buggy, he set out immediately, accompanied by Hugh, for Clover Farm.

Harry Alden's condition was unchanged. He still lay in a stupor, his heart fluttering feebly, as if about to stop beating forever. His poor mother hung over the bed, the tears streaming down her furrowed face, and her hands clasped as if in prayer. Dr. Lawrence shook his head sadly, for he saw that there was no hope; but still he tried every remedy known at length by a faint sign from the patient, and a more regular beating of the heart. A little later Harry opened his eyes.

With what a pale and wretched face did Hugh stand by the watch for the first signs of renewed life, and how great was his relief, how deep his gratitude, when that faint sigh was heard! But his relief was but temporary. Poor Harry died on the evening of the next day.

Mrs. Derwent scarcely recognized her son when he came home in an hour after all hope was at an end. He had remained at the bedside of the dying lad until the last, and the long mental and physical strain had rendered him told fearfully upon him. His face was pale and ghastly pale, and his eyes hollow and sunken. He seemed to have aged several years since the commission of his terrible mistake.

"Everybody's sayin' you will be hanged," said little Peter, coming in to see the eager to tell all he had heard. "Or else you'll hang to the prison. Everybody's down on you, and old Miss Snyder says you're a poisoner's murderer."

Poor Hugh! He did not doubt for an instant the truth of what Peter said. A word of sympathy for him. "I deserve the worst that can be done to me as well as hung, improved for life as live with such a terrible blight upon me. I shall never get over this."

want me now," said Hugh. "No one will ever trust me here again. I must go where I am not known, and try to find a new life. I don't care what my dear boy," said the doctor, "I want you more than ever. I believe that you can be trusted now. You've learned a lesson. And, Hugh, I have learned how truly honest you are. You would sooner lose your life than tell a lie. I do believe my esteem for you has increased instead of lessened. Stay here and live down this blot on your life. This failure will serve to warn you against future dangers. Repair the past by a stainless course in the future. Don't let this one error drag you down. Let it prove a blessing to you instead of a curse."

Hugh listened, and felt fresh courage rise in his heart. He took the advice down this blot on your life. This failure will serve to warn you against future dangers. Repair the past by a stainless course in the future. Don't let this one error drag you down. Let it prove a blessing to you instead of a curse."

Repair the past by a stainless course in the future. Don't let this one error drag you down. Let it prove a blessing to you instead of a curse."

His Royal Highness replied that he would do so. "Then shall you put in the corner," said the governor. His Royal Highness again replied that he should not learn his lesson, neither should he go into the corner, for he was the Prince of Wales, and he should not be treated as a commoner. He showed his anger by kicking his little foot through a pane of glass. Surprised at this act of bold defiance, Miss Hilliard, rising from her seat, said: "Sir, you must learn your lesson, and if you do not, though you are the Prince of Wales, I shall put you in the corner."

However, threats were of no avail; the defiance was repeated, and that, too, in the same determined manner as before—his Royal Highness breaking another pane of glass. Miss Hilliard, showing his anger by kicking his little foot through a pane of glass. Surprised at this act of bold defiance, Miss Hilliard, rising from her seat, said: "Sir, you must learn your lesson, and if you do not, though you are the Prince of Wales, I shall put you in the corner."

Shortly after the Prince arrived, and having learned the reason why his presence was required, addressing the Prince of Wales, and pointing to a stool or ottoman, said, "You will sit there, sir."

Prince Albert then went to his own room, and there he read the Bible in his hand, he said, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales—

"Now I want you to listen to what St. Paul says about the people who are under tutors and governors."

And having read the passage to him, he added: "It is undoubtedly true that you are the Prince of Wales, and if you conduct yourself properly, you may some day attain a great position by being in the room of your mother; but now you are only a little boy; though you are the Prince of Wales, you are only a child under tutors and governors, who must be obeyed, and must have those under them to do as they are bid.
