539 McNeill, Donald Burgess. Irish passenger steamship services. Newton .Abbot: 1969.-71. 2 v.
Bibliography: v. 2, 176-178.

Vol. 1 covers all passenger steamship services associated with North Ireland over the past 150 years. The cross-channel routes, the inshore steamers on Belfast Lough and other northern estuaries, and the small vessels are all fully described. The social and economic place of the steamers are considered as are types of traffic, fares, and over crowding. Fleet Lists give details of the vessels mentioned in the text. Vol. 2 is a similar account for south Ireland, including a description for the routes which operated from Irish ports to London, the south coast of England and the American western seaboard.
